bill itself and those who think such a thing ought to be done; namely, allow people to run around here armed with concealed firearms. And I have some articles that I will share with you, which will show so-called law-abiding citizens whose first crime was discharging a firearm, and in one case in Arnold, Nebraska, a man who had been in Iraq as a military person stuck his pistol in the car window occupied by an individual--the car was--who was carrying on in a way that the gun toter didn't think was appropriate. So then the article says the gun discharged. Well, I'm sure the NRA and others would disagree with the way that was termed, because they always tell us guns don't kill people. Well, this one did. It discharged and it killed a man, and that was the first crime committed by this hitherto law-abiding Nebraska citizen, and he was a patriot, too, because he had been in the military. But I'm going to continue. These are the places where these concealed weapons can be hidden without violating the law: purses, tote bags, shopping bags of whatever material or variety, just so the pistol is not visible, umbrellas, picnic baskets, beverage coolers, boots, bras, bloomers, shorts--jockey or boxer--briefcases, suitcases, backpacks, hidden holsters or reasonable facsimiles thereof, baggy britches, billowy shirts, bulky sweaters, flouncy skirts, et al, coats of any and every kind and variety, wide sleeves, big hair, hats, helmets, prostheses, canes and walking sticks of any kind and every variety suitable for the purpose of concealing a firearm, lunch buckets or boxes, hollowed-out books, and the like. And I should have said it would include, but not be limited to, ...oh, I did. So there are other places these weapons can be concealed. This just gives an itemization and to make suggestions, in case people hadn't thought of them. Section 24. Section 3 of this act shall be liberally construed to accomplish the purpose of ensuring that licensees may carry concealed the maximum number of pistols for personal protection, due to paranoia and stark terror of the licensee toward the licensee's family, friends, neighbors, strangers, and possible enemy invaders. None of these people who have come before the Committee of the Judiciary to push for a bill like this has told precisely whom it is they fear, and since most of them live in rural areas, where everybody knows everybody, and everybody helps everybody, I feel they're not telling us the truth when they say that, or they wouldn't feel they need to go about armed
